(i) any other matter which has to be, or may be, prescribed under the provisions of this Act.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

The problems of agricultural labour have been under consideration of the Government for quite some time. Various All-India Agricultural Labour Enquiries, the Rural Labour Enquiry and the All-India Seminar on Agricultural Labour in 1965 highlighted the problems of agricultural labour e.g. unemployment, under-employment, low wages, lack of amenities, inadequate housing, lack of organisation; resulting in a low standard of living.

Keeping in view the fact that India is a predominantly rural country, with nearly 80 per cent of its population living in rural areas, the problems of agricultural workers assume greater importance because of the sheer number involved. According to the 1971 Census, agricultural labourers in India numbered 47.48 millions against 31.52 millions in 1961. The Rural Labour Enquiry 1974-75, estimated that agricultural labour households form about 86 per cent. of the rural labour households and that the total population covered in the category of agricultural labour was 335 millions, of which about half would be wage earners. The average earnings of wages per man-day for agricultural labour households, as revealed by the 25th round of the National Sample Survey, focus the abysmal poverty of the agricultural workers of our country.

The following laws relate to various aspects of organised and unorganised labour applicable throughout India to a limited extent:—

- (1) Minimum Wages Act, 1948
- (2) Payment of Wages Act, 1936
- (3) Employees' Provident Fund and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, 1952
- (4) Payment of Gratuity Act, 1972
- (5) Industrial Disputes Act, 1947
- (6) The Trade Union Act, 1926
- (7) Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923
- (8) Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948
- (9) Maternity Benefit Act, 1961.

6. There is, however, no legislation with totality of approach to the problems of agricultural labour, barring the Kerala Agricultural Workers Act, 1974 which is a comprehensive legislation for agricultural workers in Kerala. At present, the main Central Legislation to safeguard the interests of agricultural workers is the Minimum Wages Act, 1948. States and Union territories responsible for the enforcement of this Act have been urged, from time to time, to ensure strict enforcement of the notified minimum wages by strengthening the administrative set up, utilising the staff of other Departments, e.g. Revenue, Agriculture, Rural Development etc., increasing the number of claims authorities and by giving wide publicity to the notified wages. Though some progress has been made, there are, however, frequent reports about the non-payment of notified minimum wages to agricultural workers.

7. The question of a Central legislation on the conditions of living and of work of agricultural workers was under consideration of the Government of India for quite some time. As early as May 1975, the second meeting of the Standing Committee on Agricultural Labour underlined the need for a Central legislation on the subject. In July, 1975, the 26th Session of the Labour Ministers' Conference commended the Kerala Agricultural Workers' Act, 1974 and suggested adoption of a uniform Central legislation on the subject.

In view of the large number of agricultural workers in India, whose conditions are at present not adequately safeguarded by the existing legislation, enactment of a Central legislation would go a long way in ameliorating the problem of agricultural labour to a considerable extent.

Hence, this Bill.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

The recent ghastly incident of one young newly married woman Roop Kunwar practising Sati at Deorala in Rajasthan on the 4th September, 1987, has stirred the conscience of the whole nation. This incident compels each one of us to ponder over the situation in which a criminal act of widow burning is committed by a frenzied mob as a social practice enjoying so-called religious sanction. It passes comprehension that in a modern secular democratic society like ours religion approves and preaches murder in such sanctified form. It is an outrage upon the dignity of women in free India. It is in fact, an open conspiracy on the part of certain unscrupulous vested interests to make profit by drawing upon the medieval sentiments. It is seen as a lucrative enterprise. The prosperity that has dawned on Deorala after this incident points out to this dangerous commercial aspect. The glorification of Sati, raising of memorials and temples for those who commit Sati, celebration of mahotsav and mass participation in the procession leading to the Commission of Sati, in various ceremonies, rites and functions connected therewith, are all different processes of the obnoxious scheme to achieve that end.

It is the law of Nature that who ever takes birth wants and struggles to survive and to live, as such, it is unimaginable that a young woman just stepping in the bloom of her youthful life can think of putting an end to her life even at the misfortune of the death of her husband, more so, of voluntarily burning herself alive on his pyre. If she agrees to do it or actually does it as in this incident, it cannot naturally be without the unbearable pressures, and influences of the leaders of the concerned community and the religion, effected directly or indirectly on the community in general and on her in particular. Such a woman is, in fact, compelled and forced to burn herself in the name of practising Sati. This pernicious practice is then being held high and eulogised in various forms.

The practice of Sati is blatant negation of the fundamental right to live and no Nation can allow it to happen. The plea of non-interference in the religious right can be considered to be an act of collaboration with the offenders.

It is extremely tragic that the administration had failed to curb the adventure of criminals, that the national will has faltered and the leaders had not acted on time.

It is, therefore, felt that it is the time to react against such incidents decisively by enacting a stringent central law to make secure the lives and dignity of women and to root out the medieval barbarism and revivalism.

Hence, this Bill.
